I enjoyed enjoyed holding a collective breath. As if I was hoping I'd find this place. I approach the farm in ruins cautiously. A balcony made of rotten wood comes out the front door, a murcha garden winding around it. Several windows are broken or missing, and the door hangs the hinges. Inside, I only see dust and spider webs and broken furniture. I stay and look at the ancient ruin and my heart goes away. How could I make a house out of this place? It's broken. He's in a lot of trouble. I don't know how to fix a house. I don't know how to do anything. I was raised to make a baby and die. I shouldn't be here. A single tear clings to my eyelashes. I blink and he falls into my cheek. I look around me again and, from inside the center of the dead garden, life arises. A flower sole rises, its bright green stem and spring, its petals unfolding before my eyes, the purest white I've ever seen, as a new snow fallen on the roof of Northgate. It's a rose. A white rose. And right now, I know it's for me. That this place, this forest, gave me. A sign of life. A sign of hope. I extend my hand and caress the petals. They are softer than the rabbit's hair and open even more with my touch. But unlike the red flowers that follow me everywhere, that rose doesn't scare me. I look at the farm in ruins again and see possibilities. I see a life for myself. The trees behind me twist and swing, and for the first time I think I hear something in your bale, and it's not scary but cozy. Maybe this forest wants me here. Maybe I finally found the place where I belong. What do you think about Sil's story? Tell us in the comments below! Å
